EMBODIMENT OF COLUMBIA'S WAR SONG: "ROAR, LION, ROAR"

Heroic size bronze lion, gift of the class of 1899, unveiled on Baker Field, Columbia University, on which occasion the following verses were read by the author, George S. Hellman:

He stands on immemorial rock that rose
When man was not, nor any grief of man,
Nor any human thought of the vast plan
Which still the gods are silent to disclose.

Here, on these fields of youth, he overlooks
Beauty's domain where quiet waters flow
Circling our island's end; and here we know
A wisdom past the logic of all books.

Sunsets emblazon it on scrolls of fame;
It is the poignant whisper of the breeze,
The green and hopeful message of the trees;
The stars are golden letters of its name.

Eternal beauty of the dauntless spirit
That answers Winter with the wit of Spring,
Make consecrate the gift that now we bring
To her whose benefactions we inherit.

Then, lion-hearted shall her children prove,
Whether in pain of jungle, joy of park;
For courage is the song that lights the dark,
And all the virtues to its music move.

KNOWLEDGE OF NEW BOOKS

It is difficult to keep stride with the large output of new books. Those who want to be informed about current literature find The New York Times Book Review of particular value. It enables them to make a careful selection from among the worth-while books they have time to read, and to have conversational knowledge of many others.
